FOREWORD BY THE MANAGING DIRECTOR

From thwarting farm robberies and assisting in the arrests of cash-in-transit hijacking suspects, BACSA's Eyes and Ears (E2) initiative is making a difference to the lives of ordinary South Africans as well as ensuring businesses can continue their operations.

Each victory is important in the overall campaign to combat crime and corruption in this country while the initiative also had a direct impact on avoiding violence and looting during the EFF's protest action on 20 March.

BACSA is also increasing its focus on the important work of combating rising incidences of extortion and sabotage in numerous sectors of the economy.

The National Joint Operational and Intelligence Structure (Natjoints), which coordinates all security and law enforcement operations throughout the country, has implemented a joint strategy to address this scourge. A National Priority Committee governs the implementation of all activities and structures included in the strategy and BACSA continues to act as convenor of the committee's monthly meetings.

Work is underway on various issues including discussions to reduce the number of withdrawn cases due to inaccurate reporting by investigating officers. BACSA is also a founding member of the National Non-Ferrous Metal Crime Combating Committee (NFMCCC) which works with government and the police to tackle all infrastructure crimes.

Separately the Infrastructure Crime Forum (members: Transnet, Eskom, PRASA, City Power, Gautrain, and telecommunication companies) have agreed to share crime data. The aim will be to protect infrastructure through operational awareness.

We would like to express our gratitude to the E2 members and SAPS for their tireless efforts to combat crime. We acknowledge that the successes reported in this newsletter are directly attributed to their commitment and dedication and we applaud their sacrifices, often made at great personal cost. We are privileged to partner with such a devoted and effective team.

Eyes and Ears Initiative (E2)

The Eyes and Ears Initiative (E2) is an official joint crime-fighting initiative between the South African Police Service (SAPS), BACSA, the Private Security Industry (PSI) and approved non-private security industry role players. Its goal is to enhance the total situational awareness of the SAPS by utilising the geographic footprint, technology and resources available in the private sector.

E2 was launched in 2018 and has become a well-established conduit for most of BACSA's initiatives in collaboration with the SAPS.

The EFF protest action and call for a national shutdown on 20 March 2023 was a good exhibition of business and security services working effectively together. The planned protest was projected to potentially bring hundreds of thousands of disgruntled people out into the streets, and there were concerns about violent looting, similar to the riots in July 2021.

E2 worked closely with the SAPS National Operational Command Centre, which coordinated the flow of information. Prior to the event, information obtained from the private sector was shared with the National Operational Command Centre for validation.

All E2 partners were constantly kept up to date and BACSA formed part of the planning meetings conducted by the SAPS at national, provincial and district levels and formed part of the national activation on the day. The private security industry provided 19 helicopters for air support along with drones, armed reaction vehicles and security personnel. These were placed based on recommendations by the SAPS to assist law enforcement. It made it possible for the police to plan and improve reaction times. This involved the joint integrated approach of all government law enforcement agencies and the private sector.

Personnel from BACSA, together with E2 personnel provided by the private security industry, were stationed in the National Joint Operational and Intelligence Structure, the National Operational Command Centre and Provincial Operational Command Centres to ensure that information from the private sector and the SAPS was channelled directly to senior intelligence and law enforcement structures and the private security industry.

Furthermore, additional security personnel were deployed at shopping centres and identified hotspot areas and placed on standby from Friday 17 March to Tuesday 21 March. E2 provided 195 public unrest information leads to law enforcement during that period.

The above well-planned and executed plan was critical to the successful efforts to maintain law and order on the day.

By 10 pm on 20 March, the SAPS had arrested more than 550 protestors for (among others) public violence, intimidation, damage to critical infrastructure, theft and attempted looting. Most arrests were in Gauteng (149) followed by the Northern Cape (95), Eastern Cape (80) and Free State (64).

The SAPS senior management complimented the role players within the E2 initiative for the early identification of incidents and coordination of the response within the private sector, which enabled violent and unlawful incidents to be detected and subdued quickly. It was mentioned publicly that without the E2 Initiative in KwaZulu-Natal, the outcome of protests would not have been as favourable as it was. It is also noted that the E2 initiative is firmly entrenched in operational plans by the SAPS and other law enforcement agencies.
